ARBITRATOR DEPOSITS (unused portions are refundable)

Arbitrators require that the parties pay a specified deposit amount. From that deposit amount, the assigned arbitrator will deduct his/her hourly fee in direct proportion to the amount of work done on the arbitration. Please note, if one party fails to participate in the arbitration, the arbitrator has the discretion to require the participating party to provide the absent party's arbitrator deposit as well as its own.

Except as noted above, any unused portion of the arbitrator deposit is returned to the parties who provided the deposit once the arbitration has finished. If the amount of time spent by the arbitrator on a particular arbitration exceeds the amount of the deposit, the arbitrator may require the parties to provide the additional fees. In some cases, the arbitrator requires the prevailing (i.e., winning) party to pay the additional arbitrator fee and then the arbitrator includes that amount in the arbitration award to be recovered from the non-prevailing party.
